

In the Movies:

In February 1999, Mt. Hope Cemetery was selected from a number of cemeteries in Indiana for a short clip from a film called The Distance, making its first appearance in an amateur film fest. The scene was shot in section F to the north of the equipment building in a small cluster of trees.

The script involved a man who had just been released from prison and was visiting the gravesite of his daughter. She had grown up under his strong hand of abuse and now it was too late to tell her he was sorry. The scene was filled with regret and grief at her loss and his feelings of remorse.
